BLACK GUR LEVEL, HENRICO COUNTY, VA., February 24, 1877. Editors Dispatch: Gentlemen, - The question for debate last night being on the relative merit of sheep and dogs, and a report having gone abroad that a bill was up in the Legislature for the abolition of the latter class of animals, there was an unusually large attendance. The debate was opened by Dencon Smith, of Piney Ridge, who made an exhaustive argument in support of the affirmative; but as the Dispatch has so often given its columns to the sheep advocates, we think it but fair that a plea should be heard in behalf of the other side. We will therefore omit the Deacon's remarks, which, by the way, were most excellent, and restrict ourselves to a faithful report of the argument for the negative.

The speaker, whose name we failed to catch, was a lithe, deep-chested young fellow of some seven or eight and twenty, with a frank bearing, a bold eye, and a manner reputed to have "the coldest nose of any dog in the Chickahominy bottom."

Annd profound silence the orator quietly arose, tossed a quid of tobacco through a broken pane in the window, and thus addressed himself in an easy, conversational tone to the presiding officer:

Mr. President, if you will take the brouble to turn to section 10 of our revised bylaws you find it to be incumbent on the presiding officer of this society to check in their incipiency any remarks of a personal nature in which a member may indulge and yet, sir, for more than forty minutes have calmly listened to the wretched drivel of this wool-gathering idiot from Piney Ridge, who has the audacity -[Cries of "Order," and a ruling by the chair: The gentleman from Willow-Oak Bottom will observe the proprieties of debate.] It's all very well for the presiding officer to abuse the privileges -[Renewed cries of "Order" and general confusion, during which the speaker throws aside his coat, leaps on the bench, and with wild gesticulations and flashing eyes makes his presence felt, and then with inconceivable volubility pours forth the vials of his rising wrath.] I tell you, Mr. President, that I will not be suppressed, nor bullied, nor bulldozed, nor put down; and if any son of Piney Ridge shall again attempt to break the force of my argument by interrupting me, without cause, by the twinkling stars above us, sir, and the moonbeam's lambent light, I'll give him cause, sir, to interrupt me with cause. [Order being thus happily restored the orator continued :] I say that it is all very well, sir, for you to abuse the privileges of your official position by stiffing the gush of an honest indignation, but I declare before this assembly and before the county of Henrico that when the bleating-a-a-gentleman from Piney Ridge took occasion to speak disparagingly of hound-puppies he was guilty of a gross personality! [Sensation, and cries of "That's so" from the wool-gatherers.]

I shouldn't care a pine-tag, Mr. President, for the united villification of the whole so we publish it. Nevertheless, if he will was at the instance of that pestiferous fac- allow us, we will say that it is not poetry by tion that section 10 was incorporated into a good deak] our by-laws, and I have been told in inviolable confidence by the Widow Green that the clause in question was particularly intended for me. But, sir, I scorn to fling mud at an adobe wall; the traducing villains will find from me a fitting refuge in the slime of their own life one of the most distinguished and infamy, and so leaving them to writhe and valued citizens of the State, now reposes at wriggle in their native mire, I approach Hollywood .- Editor News. the question under debate with a steady purpose to rise to the height of the great argument involved, and leave the bandying of opprobious epithets to the base wretches who are vile enough to employ such detestable means of assault.

It is charged, sir, by the abandoned monster who has the effrontery to speak to the affirmative of this proposition that sheep are superior to dogs! The nameless audacity and impenetrable stupidity which such an assertion implies carries with it its own refutation, yet it would seem that one stray gleam of reason has pierced the gentleman's dense skull, inasmuch as he bad the sagacity to make but a single allusion to dogs, while he devotes the whole remainder of his miserable twaddle to an idiotic panegyric on sheep. And, sir, though the gentleman in his disgraceful tirade distinctly charged that "hound-puppies were constantly in mischief and not worth the trouble of raising," though he made this slanderouslypersonal and ineffably-scurrilous remark unrebuked by you, and within hearing of overy one in this assembly, yet will I not permit myself to be betrayed into the utterance of unworthy terms, but will at once proceed to show you by ovidence of the show you be ovidenced. proceed to show you by evidence deduced from sacred writ and from the calm historic page that the atrocious animal so fulsomely lauded by him has ever been man's direst foe, his pursuing fate, the very incarnation of the principle of evil. The serpent, str, in Paradise, has been unjustly charged with man's first temptation, but we know that his hissing and his twining would have been all in vain if Eve had not cast sheep's eyes at Adam. It was what? The fleece, sir, of that betraying with such tremendous consequences!

granger should. It might have been so but a touching tribute, worthy of the patriot for the malignant influence of wool and dead whose mortal remains lie in the honmutton. Abel was restless and discontent- ored rest of the Virginian cemetery .ed, and nothing would do but he must abandon the spade and turn his attention to sheep-farming; and thence came the strife and rivalry of mixed industries and all the woes that follow that desolating doctrine of the division and economy of labor.

I tell you, sir, it was not for nothing that the astrologers of old gave this creature its place in the first sign of the zodiac, and made its influence in every conjunction malign. There is something, sir, pervertedand perverting in the inmost nature of the animal. Nothing less than its supernal habit of forever going astray would empower theology to floor the mathematics and enable Brother Moody to prove that each one of them is ninety-nine times more re-fractory than the rest. Its very name, sir, is the very synonym of every evil. If a man is an idiot you call bim a mutton-bead; if he is robbed you say he is fleeced; if the robber is caught he is said to look sheepish, and if after that he goes eternally juice on subscriptions, in our time, and now to the bad, why he naturally culminates as a lost sheep.

Jacob, sir, was an honest man-a man of good principles and charitable impulses but in an unguarded moment be identified .himself with the sheep interest, and forthwith we see him sinking down from bad to worse, projecting with old Laban's flock, patient female who languidly stands in a and finally planting an enmity which shall endure forevermore between man and his some gentleman gives her his own good seat mother-in-law.

'Twas even-tide upon a summer's day—
The lambent light and length'ning shadows lay
Upon a chain of hills which rose and fell
In bold acclivity and nestling del!;
Along the graceful slopes and valleys fair
Luxuriant verdure wayed; and trees were there,
And flowers of sweetest'scent and lovellest hue,
Filling their golden chalices with dew.

Cleaving the hills, in tidal majesty A noble river rolled towards the sea Reflecting here and there the sunset dyes
In "counterfelt presentment" of the skies.
And onward still, where foaming breakers surged
O'er rocks and reefs, enchanting ites emerged
From silv'ry spray, lay stilly, softly bright
As mezzotints, bathed in the rosy light And purple mist of evening's parting beams— Ethereal as the imagery of dreams. On either hand along the sinuous tide

On either hand along the sinuous tide
An opening landscape, picturesque and wide,
In continuity of hills and fields.
Rich in the garniture cultivation yields—
The distant paths, and nearer heights around
With smiling villages and cities crowned—
Nature and Art thus vicing to display
New beguttes on the river's winding way. New beauties on the river's winding way.

To meet the sky, this panorama spread
Out from a silent city of the dead.
Sequestered from the haunts of busy life.
Its sounds of noisy pleasure, toil, and strife
Were far removed:—and yet mid the repose
Pervading, there were voices which rose
Attuned unto harmony in keeping
With the scene—the voice of waters sweeping
Onward forever, deep as occan's roar.
Remotely thund'ring on some rugged shore—
The voice of leaves and birds, the whisp'ring breeze,
The soul of music sighing thro' the trees—
While chime from evening bells from distant spire
Like far, faint echoes filled the vesper choir.
